MILK FLOW INCREASED.

Dipping Does Not Reduce Yield—Ticks Take Toll from Blood of Dairy Cows.

"Dipping cows to kill fever ticks actually increases milk yields," says the United States department of agriculture in a recent statement. "This is proved in actual experiment and in the results obtained in thousands of dairy herds the owners of which are thorough believers in tick eradication by the dipping-vat method. Careful records prove that lightly infested cows produce 18.6 per cent less milk than free cows, while cows heavily infested produce on an average 42.4 per cent less milk than similar cows freed from ticks. This was established by records of yields kept over considerable periods for ticks before they were dipped and for the same herds after they were dipped.

"A herd of 20 lightly ticked cows produced 29 quarts less milk per day, or a loss of 5,800 quarts in 200 days' milking, than 20 tick-free cows of the same kind. Twenty heavily ticked cows produced 67 quarts per day less, or a loss of 13,400 quarts in 200 days' milking, than 20 tick-free cows of a similar breed. The monetary gain from dipping of the lightly infested herd would have been $280 a year; from the heavily ticked herd a dipping would have given increased profits of $660 a year.

"Here is an actual record from a dairy herd: A dairyman in heavily infested territory dipped his cattle. One week after dipping, his herd of 42 cows gave 10 gallons of milk a day more—an increase of 16.6 per cent from the start. The milk sold for 35 cents a gallon, and he got $3.50 more per day from his herd from one dipping. He had begun to feed the cows instead of the ticks.

"Those who assert that dipping diminishes milk flow judge entirely from the milk production for two or three days immediately following the trip to the vat. It is natural that for two or three days after a milk animal has been driven a few miles and gone through the excitement of dipping, her milk flow will temporarily fall off slightly. The actual figures show that for two or three days there may be a reduction of an average of 10.6 per cent, or about 0.8 of a quart for an eight-quart cow. In three to five days the temporary falling off disappears and the dairyman would keep records over any long period he would find that getting rid of ticks was increasing his actual milk production from 18 to 42 per cent.

"That dipping cows to get rid of cattle ticks must increase milk flow can readily be reasoned out by anyone who will approach the subject with an open mind and not let his prejudice fight his pocket-book. Cows can make milk only from blood. It follows that the more blood ticks suck out from them the less material the cows will have to turn into milk. When it is realized that the ticks on a heavily infested animal consume as much as 200 pounds of blood a year, it can be seen that a heavily infested cow will lose by the tick route a large and important amount of milk-making material. When it is realized that the cow can make blood to supply her milk glands only from the feed she consumes, it can be seen that the tick by sucking blood is wasting a lot of good feed that ought to be going to increase milk production. "It is as unreasonable to estimate the effect of dipping on a cow's yield from the milk she gives for two days after she has been dipped as it would be for a purchaser of a cow to expect that cow to give her full milk record the first day after she had been driven to a new farm and placed in strange quarters. No sensible dairyman would send back a cow because she did not live up to the guaranteed record for a day or two after she had been shipped to his farm. All the department asks of anyone is to use fair records. Experience with millions of cattle dipped proves conclusively that dipping increases materially and in no way diminishes the year's milk yield or injures the cattle."

Waste of Good Paper.

Here before us are 16 three-column pages of reading matter. They convey the interesting intelligence that the fourth was celebrated in many foreign capitals, that the American steamer Orleans has been sunk, and that the war department has worked out a plan whereby the National Guard may be called to the colors on different days, but drafted into the federal service at one time, so that the officers may retain their relative rank. These are the first-page "features" of a paper that reached Manchester on Monday. As for the other 15 pages, the news is just about as fresh as that of the first page—that is, substantially every item has already appeared in the newspapers of general circulation, or in the columns of journals which publish army and navy appointments and orders.

Appeals for household economies, proceedings of the Congress, officers' appointments, reviews of foreign exports and imports, suggestions to educators, an account of means adopted to protect the Mexican border against a new pest—these and many other things of the same general kind, issued for the most part by the Washington departments and sent to all the newspapers of standing, makes of this little paper what might be imagined a most interesting thing if there were no American press. There being an American press, however, one is inclined to ask what useful purpose is served by the publication of a journal which cannot possibly reach most of its readers until almost every item in it has been printed elsewhere.

This paper is a tireless advocate of conservation of necessities. It gives largely of its space to all sorts of appeals by Mr. Hoover, for instance, and in many ways urges upon us that getting out of things all there is in them. It is mighty good advice. But one can hardly help asking why the management of this publication doesn't practice conservation a bit by going out of business. A good many tons of news print paper must go into the making of this sheet in the course of a month, and most of that probably goes by the most direct route to the waste basket and the junk dealer's cart. In these days, when the newspapers are suspending the return privilege, cutting down their exchange lists, and adopting all sorts of devices to make a pound of paper do the work of a pound, what possible excuse is there for using perfectly good white news print by the ton for the recording of "news" that pretty much everybody has already read?

By the way, this "news paper" to which we refer is the Official Bulletin, "published daily under order of the president by the committee on public information, George Creed, chairman." It probably provides a few fat jobs.—Manchester Union.

It has been the practice of the local telephone exchange to keep its commercial office open on the evenings of the 19th and 20th in order that patrons might have an opportunity to pay bills before the discount period expired. Since the discount plan has been abolished the office will not be open in the future during the evening.

Two small Italian children, residing in the house at the corner of Quarry and South Main streets, caused their parents no end of worry for a time Saturday night when they were taken suddenly ill as the result of eating strange berries found in the woods not far from their home. The berries caused a form of sleeping sickness and for some time the condition of the youngsters was regarded as serious. Neighbors prescribed mustard as an emetic and after two doses of that reliable remedy the children began to get better. Mystery surrounds the identity of the berries partaken of by the babes and after their recovery an earnest examination failed to disclose any information that would establish the species of wild fruit devoured.

The ban on the municipal excursion to Fort Ethan Allen, which the city council had arranged for yesterday only to have the trip called off because of official objections from the post did not prevent a large number of Barre people from calling on relatives enlisted in the National Guard. Among the guardmen there is an air of uncertainty surrounding the destination of the regiment, but there is a general feeling that the Vermont troops will be transferred within a short time. Among the local visitors were: Alderman A. J. Loranger, Mrs. Loranger and Miss Lorraine Loranger, Mr. and Mrs. M. S. Levin and daughter, Miss Rosa Levin, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Burke, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Anderson and daughter, Carrie, of Merchant street, and Miss Loretta Downer, Clifford Pirie, Thomas Tomasi, Daniel Lascor, Miss Isabelle Reid, George Thompson, John Emalie, Asa Tyrrell and Dr. Deacon Deacon's family.

Evangelistic churches located about City square held union services Sunday forenoon and came together again at 5 o'clock in the afternoon for an open-air meeting in the park. Pursuant to a program mapped out by the committee of clergymen, the speaker, Judge Stanley C. Wilson of Chelsea, spoke in phrases that had the ring of patriotism in them. His message was one of hope and an appeal in which he urged his hearers to put the country before self in the present crisis.

Muscle was furnished by a union choir of mixed voices and devotionals were conducted by Rev. Edgar Crossland of the First Presbyterian church. The patriotic Sunday afternoon meetings will be continued during the remainder of July and August and an effort is being made to secure several prominent men of Vermont to continue the series of inspirational addresses begun by Judge Wilson.
